

Despite all the talk about the hard times that have hit Goldfield, social activities are more noticeable down there than ever before. Letters to friends tell of the gay times planned some weeks ago for the holidays, and one of the bright matrons formerly of this city, but now an official chaperon in Goldfield, naively adds, "Of course, we haven't any money, but we've learned what a good time we can have without it." And she goes on to tell of a proposed ball masque, several dinners she is to chaperon, of visits from San Francisco beauties, and of their glad clothes and good looks and prosperity in general. It's about time local folk were beginning to learn what a good time they can have without money. A lot of us have known it for years and years.

The friends and admirers of Mrs. Annie Pike Greenwood, whose Christmas poem has won for her such a mead of praise, will be glad to learn that her first son, Walter Pike Greenwood, was born two days before Christmas, at their home in Garden City, Kansas. The Christmas baby, in view of the beautiful thought on motherhood expressed in the poem, is most significant, and many messages of congratulation have been sent to the gifted young mother whose personality is so well remembered.

The proposed subscription dance is called off. More properly speaking, it is postponed till a more opportune time. Everyone is to be busy Tuesday evening rushing the New Year around and introducing him or else hustling the old one into his jacket to protect him from the cold. Then, too, the memories of the ball masque are still with those who enjoyed it and the time seems not quite propitious for another event.

The week just opening is bound to be a busier one than society has had for some time. What with New Year's eve and "the morning after," there will be plenty doing. Numbers of homes will be open, some informally and some for the more formal receiving of friends. Besides these there will be no end of children's affairs, the effort being especially to get them over with during the holidays.

Meantime the families are getting settled and in shape in their new quarters, and the post will Women's Clubs.

The members of the Ladies' Literary club and their friends had a real treat Friday in the form of a delightfully entertaining talk on "China and the Orient" given by B. G. Wilson, who had spent several years in the country, and whose information was given at first hand. Mr. Wilson prefaced his talk with a vivid description of the empire from a geographical standpoint. He followed this with a live, entertaining talk on the whole country gathered from an intimate knowledge of conditions. The music was furnished by Miss Vinne St. Claire, and by a double quartette of ladies under the direction of Madame Amanda Swenson. No business of any importance came before the club, and the attendance was limited owing to the time of year.

The music section of the Ladies' Literary club will hold its postponed meeting tomorrow morning at the club house. Chadrwick will be the composer studied, and Mrs. Owen McAleer will read the paper. The instrumental music will be furnished by Mrs. Fred Horning, Mrs. J. T. Treasure, Mrs. Alvah Lewis and Miss Bessie Williamson. Vocal numbers will be given by Mrs. W. A. Wetzel, Mrs. W. F. James, Mrs. Fisher Harris and a quartette composed of Mrs. James, Mrs. Ferguson, Mrs. Oglesby and Mrs. Lilly.
